But not thus could the God of Israel be localised. His omnipresence, as well as his omnipotence, must be vindicated; and the slanders and misconceptions of the heathen answered in a way they could understand. It is one of the most mournful results of sin that it distorts the true idea of God; and there are those to-day who have even less noble ideas of His being and attributes than many of the ancient heathen. Jehovah is continually declaring His power and godhead--in His works, by His ministers, in the events of His Providence, in the story of redemption. II. By means apparently disproportionate (verses 24-27). The Syrians were numerous-- filled the country : the Israelites were comparatively few--like two little flocks of kids. The Syrians were well appointed: the Israelites but indifferently equipped. The Syrians chose their own battle-ground where their peculiar method of...
