July 17.--There was very little wind, and we continued off the island. In the afternoon a small boat, containing a couple of men, was rowed towards us. We found they were Greeks who had escaped from Chismeh, having been threatened to be murdered by the Turks. They had fled into the woods, where they lived in concealment a week, when they managed to obtain a boat, in which they meant to have rowed to the first Greek island they could reach, had they not fallen in with us. They were immediately taken on board, and their boat hoisted up. Their provision had been only some very hard brown bread and a bottle of water, and their means of defence a cutlass which one of them possessed. They had originally made their escape from the island of Scio. When the Turks took this island, the horrible massacre they perpetrated, and the desolation which followed, were most barbarous, and revolting for any civilised being to witness. Out of a population of upwards of 100,000, the major part were inhumanly butchered in cold blood, a few thousand escaped, and the manufacturing people, amounting to nearly 20,000, were spared till another day. These people lived at the extremity of the island, and some time after were driven away, in consequence of the repeated murders, exactions, and cruelty of their oppressors. 38,000 women and children were sold as slaves. Some of the young men were taken to...
